The place will not be changed unless Congress should be called together at an earlier date than given out by the President."

THE CABINET MEETING.

Congress Will Not Meet in Extra session Before September.

WASHINGTON, June 27.—Two hours were consumed by the cabinet this morning in the new phase of the silver question and other matters demanding attention. The two conferences yesterday afternoon and evening between the President and Secretary Carlisle simplified matters to some extent. Although the discussion, it is said, took a wide range, it was necessarily brought back to one important and unmanageable point, that the executive had no power in the premises, Congress alone being able to deal with the measures for relief.

It was stated in the cabinet that the monthly purchase of silver must be curtailed or else Congress must be convened in special session immediately. As the President has decided to call Congress together in the early part of September to deal with the financial situation and manifested no intention of changing his stated purpose, a project of an earlier session of Congress is quite school, was dropped.

So far as the continuance of the purchase of silver bullion under the Sherman law is concerned it was pointed out that instead of than two months remained before Congress would convene in extraordinary session. It was thought that during the interim time the silver purchases would be only $4,500,000 ounces, a comparatively small amount in view of the previous purchases. That the best way to deal with the question was to await the course of events for two months longer was generally agreed to, and it was with this view dominant that the meeting adjourned.

Secretary Carlisle in response to a request to express his views on the financial situation as affected by the action of India on silver, politely declined to say anything for the future.

Since June 6 the Treasury department has gained $6,105,541 in gold, the net gold today being $65,626,607. The lowest point reached was on June 6 when the gold had decreased to ...

PRESIDENT ANDREWS.

His Opinion Sought on the Silver Situation.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., June 27.—President Andrews of the Brown university, who was one of the American delegates to the Brussels conference, in an interview in regard to the action of the Indian government stopping the free coinage of silver, said: "It is impossible that this action should bring any relief to the silver situation in England. It will make the condition of foreign exchange a little more stable, as foreign traders of England and the big merchants and exchanges of Bombay and Calcutta, that is to say, it will arrest the fall in the intrinsic value of coin silver in India and give a stability between the present money of India, which is silver, and the gold money of England. But in doing so it will cause a break between the value of Indian silver as money and its value as bullion, just such as exists between the silver money of the United States and France and the corresponding bullion. The result of the system, if persisted in would be to impose on India full prices, such as prevail over the entire gold using world. Further, the value of silver in the rupee being so much greater, there would be an overwhelming temptation to introduce the rupee from other countries. It could be copied exactly and made of the same weight and fineness. It would be as good a coin in every respect as the one minted in India.

"Another difficulty arises in connection with the habit of the Indian people of turning their savings into ornaments of silver. A native Indian does not speak of these as worth so many rupees, there being no difference in his mind between the silver in the form of an ornament and in the form of a coin. Bracelets are often used for money. It is said these trinkets in India amount to $10,000,000 in value. Now, suppose these mints are closed to silver, this vast property is at once depreciated and it is hardly possible that such a scheme can be carried into effect without riot and bloodshed.

"As for America, I believe this action will be fortunate. Silver will drop in gold prices and it may be necessary to repeal the Sherman law. It will then drop still more and Great Britain will then be forced to take concerted action with other nations."

Varying Opinions Among Magnates of the Metropolis.

NEW YORK, June 27.—Generally speaking the bankers today reported the financial situation as somewhat easier everywhere, but they qualified this statement by saying that the demands for realizing sent while no larger, were very general from almost all parts of the country. No New York Clearing house loaning certificates were issued today. There was no stipulation for any.

Frederick D. Tappen, president of the Gallatin National bank, and chairman of the Clearing House Loan committee, speaking of the situation today said: "The clearing house balances are small and all distributed and everything looked easy and comfortable. I think, he continued, "that there will be a great deal more confidence in the situation after the July disbursements have ...

THE FALL IN SILVER.

Silver is down—down lower than it has been before and there is no immediate prospect that it will come up. The situation must be faced, bad as it is for Colorado. It is clear that nothing will be done by this administration to bring silver up, and that any free coinage bill that might be passed would be vetoed by the President. There is therefore no prospect of immediate relief. Seeing the facts, it is the part of sensible men to look the situation squarely in the face and see what can be done.

In preparing to see in a paper so devoted to silver as The Pueblo Chieftain, published in a community that depends for its prosperity so largely upon the melting of silver, a sentiment like this, which appeared in its editorial columns yesterday:

This is about the bluest day Colorado has seen for a generation. It should be remembered, however, that silver is not the only product of Colorado, and therefore the country need not go quite all the way to the dogs.

That is the right way to look at the situation. It is the view which with all his powers and eloquence President Jeffery urged upon the Western Colorado Congress last week. In a State whose resources are so rich and so varied as those of Colorado, there is no need to feel that the bottom has dropped out of creation because silver has dropped to seventy-three cents. No doubt it is a severe blow to the State, a blow that will be felt by every community within its borders; but it is by no means a fatal blow. We have still our mines of gold, of copper, of lead and iron and coal, our oil fields are still producing. Our farmers are active. Our crops of alfalfa, grain, of all kinds of fruit, were never better than they are this year. Our manufactures are growing. Our climate is constantly attracting more and more health seekers who bring money with them. Our cities are growing, our industries are increasing in number.

So much for our present resources, leaving silver out of the question. Many a State has become great on a smaller capital than this. Colorado can be a great State even without silver.

But it is not to be feared that the silver mines will all shut down, and their production altogether cease, even at present prices; and the price of silver is sound eventually to come up. The world cannot get along without its use as a money metal. If bimetallism is right in theory, as we all believe it is, then it is bound to come into practice; and the present attempt of all the civilized nations to get along on a single gold standard will probably lead them to an appreciation of the necessity of a double standard sooner than if one or two of the great nations still maintained the double standard and absorbed in that way a large part of the surplus silver.

These are some considerations which go to show that the outlook is not quite as blue as at first glance it may seem.

ANOTHER ANARCHIST GOVERNOR.

If the people of Illinois had known at fall that J. P. Altgeld was a follower of the red flag, and sympathizer with Anarchists and Nihilists, he would never have been elected Governor. The vote of Chicago might have done their utmost for him, but the rest of the State would have stood almost solidly for Americanism and good government.

Governor Altgeld, a partner of the Chicago Anarchist, Parsons, Schwab, Fielden, Neebe and Neebe is an invitation to the worst elements in the community to run riot. It is a justification of wholesale murder. The Governor has done his best to encourage the men who want to destroy all government, and wreck the entire social and political fabric.

When the Anarchists were convicted and over the Republic breathed freer. Their conviction was an act of self-preservation and the sentence passed upon them should have been executed. It was a costly clemency that commuted their sentence to imprisonment for life. For life, indeed! A sentence to life imprisonment in this country is a mockery of justice. The average duration of the sentence of life prisoners is less than ten years. Some demagogue like Altgeld is almost sure within a few years to get into the Governor's chair, and pardon a lot of the fiends who should have been hanged.

The sentence passed upon all the Chicago Anarchists was strictly in accordance with law, after a fair trial and after conviction by a jury. All efforts to get it set aside by the courts have failed. It was applauded by all order loving and intelligent Americans. It is too late for a place-hunting politician, an un-American revolutionist like Altgeld, to try to argue against the court's decree. The decree was just and right. If society is to exist at all, if men are to be protected in the enjoyment of life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness, then Anarchism must be suppressed decisively, and Anarchists who attempt to carry their theories into practice deserve no more pity than so many wild beasts. They are worse than wild beasts, because, while like the latter, they live only to destroy, they have human intelligence, and can be, and mean to be, far more destructive than any wild animal. There are cases where severe measures are the truest kindness, where life must be taken in order to preserve life. There is neither justice nor mercy in molly-coddling Anarchists. They are the rattlesnakes of the body politic. This is a big country, but there is no room in it for them.

Governor Altgeld has done his worst to blow the smoldering embers of Anarchy into a flame. He has endangered the lives and property of the citizens of Chicago. He has set back the hands on the dial of progress. He has disgraced himself, his party and his State.

TIN PLATE.

Secretary Carlisle is apparently afraid of tin plate. The quarterly report of Colonel Ira Ayer, special agent of the Treasury Department in charge of statistics of production of tin plate, has been in the Secretary's possession for nearly a month, but he refuses to make it public. Facts have transpired which show pretty clearly why Mr. Carlisle does not care to make it public. It shows too much. It demonstrates that enough tin plate is made now in this country to insure the continuance, under the provisions of the McKinley act, of the duty on tin plate. It shows that more than [illegible] of tin and terne plate were produced in this country in the first quarter of 1893,—more than were produced in the entire half year previous. It proves conclusively that tin plate manufacturing in the United States is a success.

Of course this proof is unpleasant to Mr. Carlisle and to Democrats in general. They hooted at the idea of making tin plate in this country, when the McKinley bill was passed, and no amount of evidence since then has been able to change their opinion. But Colonel Ayer is an agent of the government. The facts that he collects are sworn statements. His pamphlet is an official publication. Furthermore, Colonel Ayer is known to be one of the most careful and accurate men in the service. His report would therefore prove conclusively that all the Democratic statements about tin plate have been wrong, and will make it more difficult for that coming Administration tariff bill to knock all the duty off tin plate. That is where the shoe pinches. It is pretty safe to predict either that the report will be "doctored" before it is permitted to be published, or that some way of discrediting it will be attempted.

A Dead Letter.

The Del Norte Enquirer says:

Our forestry laws are a dead letter on the statute books. Our game laws are framed to suit the aesthetic tastes of a few dude hunters, and a commissioner is paid by the State to see to it that the said dudes have everything they want.

This is just the kind of argument The Chieftain has long been presenting, but met with no encouragement from anybody. Now the matter is taken up even by a paper located in the mountains, right among the tie choppers. It is not sentimental regard for aesthetics, but the pursuit of the most intensely practical that demands the preservation of the forests. If we could have a few patrolmen appointed, with authority to guard the forests as strictly as the "game wardens" are allowed to guard the game, the mere knowledge that they might be prowling around would go a long way in preventing men from wantonly cutting and burning those great pine forests which act as the best possible reservoirs for supplying the farms with water.—[Pueblo Chieftain.

Something to Think About.

To the Editor of THE GAZETTE:

The prosperity and growth of Colorado Springs depends upon entirely different causes from those which have made the growth of other western cities. Ours is neither a great business center nor a manufacturing point. Our title to a prosperous city lies in the wide-spread and growing appreciation that this is the most healthful, [illegible] most pleasant place to have a home. The day will doubtless come when more business will center here,—when some large manufacturing enterprise will be the forerunner for others to follow—but meanwhile, and probably for all time, the especial attraction of this spot will be its natural beauty and healthfulness plus the artificial advantages which liberal-minded, far-seeing men and women will bring to it.

Any man who wants himself to prosper here must do his utmost to make the city prosper, and the only way to accomplish that is by helping along all institutions which are in keeping with the city's peculiar character and which directly minister to its prosperity.

Such institutions as the College or the Casino any reasoning townsman will, on the basis of purest selfishness, support and help along. Yet one of the newer institutions which promises extraordinary benefits for the city, and for which our town people here, as yet, done comparatively little, is The [illegible] School.

Colorado Springs is the ideal place for a Summer school. It literally encouraged in its first years, it will soon be self-supporting, annually bringing hundreds of cultivated people, of teachers and of advanced students to our city. This for one thing, will ultimately result in Colorado Springs securing a specially reduced summer railroad rate. The professors of the school, picked men of the very highest standing in Eastern universities, changing every year, will introduce our especial advantages as a city to the very people who can do most to induce others to come here. And, furthermore, the possibility of having the best thought and the highest culture of the East brought to our very doors once a year—of listening to and meeting the most famous representatives of the literary and of the scientific world—of being able, by personal touch, to keep abreast of the foremost culture of our land, surely this will make life richer here, and will stamp Colorado Springs still more notably as an ideal city and an ideal home.

Every citizen is interested in the success of this Summer school,—and every citizen ought to be anxious to contribute to its financial support. If all will respond, the burden will not fall heavily on anybody.

JOHN R. PRATT.

Trollope and Lang.

A clever man once said to me, in speaking of the novels of the late Anthony Trollope, that he always read them with a peculiar sense of tickled vanity, as though half convinced that he "could do it all himself if he tried." Neither he nor any man could have done it all himself, no matter how hard he might have tried, for although Trollope, even in his earlier and best novels, was fundamentally and profoundly literary, nevertheless breathed an atmosphere fragrance about "The Bertrams" and "The Barchester Towers" and "The Small House at Allington" which no imitation would have touched. Afterward this fragrance almost entirely fled, and a novel like "Is He Popenjoy?" compared with the delightful shrewdness and worldly wisdom of "Miss Mackenzie" as a photogravure compares with an etching. But Trollope, notwithstanding much really unworthy work in the last decade or so of his life, remains a very distinct personality in English letters. And at his finest I should say that he is perhaps the very opposite of that "divine amateur" his some cynic in London not long ago called him, Mr. Andrew Lang. It turns out, when we read Trollope's autobiography, that he was considerable of a scholar. Mr. Lang is apparently a scholar, too, and an extremely earnest one. But while Trollope kept scholarship and the sense of literary form rigidly in the background, Mr. Lang is incessantly thrusting them into the foreground. The former is forever concealing from us how much he knows; the latter is constantly revealing it. He often reveals it in a very pretty and winsome way, but it is, after all, a way disheartening to the general reader. If Mr. Lang were a greater personage, one might imagine that he could secure the reverence of his readers for a sort of encyclopedic omniscience. But he seemingly aims to be thought the reverse of great—to be thought, in fact, "delightful" and [illegible] I present sure that he does not often thoroughly succeed in carrying out these intentions, but one is tempted sometimes to marvel just how he stands with the ubiquitous ignorance among those who peruse him. It is not a new style, this of Mr. Lang's, and at least there is a clear precedent in it. He looks, I say, at a subject, and, lo! we are told that Charles Lamb had to say some particularly occasion about a particular event to this or that intimate friend. He walks in Fleet street and glances at the book stalls, and Sidney Smith's remark about a certain kind of old book or new book immediately confronts us. He reads a new book, and to the dead that often to the living for Mr. Lang, like the sort of character he is, does not often concern himself with [illegible] and we now and then wonder if the author is not writing a biographical dictionary on the new and astute principle. The writer's style does not merely smell of the student's lamp, it is rankly oleaginous with it. And if to the nostrils of his readers his oil waft a fascinating odor (which I have reason to believe is true), why, all the luckier for Mr. Lang.—Edgar Fawcett, in July Lippincott's.

Chicago Architecture.

No other American city can claim such a record, and it is not the least glory of the whole that the artistic results are as satisfactory as they are characteristic. Granted that the bad buildings of the city outnumber the good, the latter are already so numerous and are so entirely part and parcel of Chicago as really to represent its present architectural spirit. And this spirit is thoroughly business like, thoroughly comprehensive of the complicated problems which fledge in and bind the architect at every turn. Chicago buildings are not palaces, they are not highly ornamental edifices, they are not wonders of decorative skill nor miracles of gingerbread adjustment. They are calm business structures, designed for business, used for business, and admirable because the business motive is so evident. If they are plain it is because there is reason for the plainness, not because their architects cannot design good ornament nor because decorative structures are not appreciated. They must be judged for what they are, not what they are not nor what they might have been. Those who want palaces for their places of business should not find fault with the people of Chicago because they are wiser and reserve their palatial work for palatial structures or some public building like the Auditorium. The buildings of Chicago form one of the most distinctive and remarkable and successful products of American architecture, and it will be a decided step in advance when we in the East learn to appreciate them better and take them as models for similar structures for ourselves.

At last America has buildings worth going a thousand miles to see, and the traveler who sets forth from New York on his first western tour will find in the buildings of Chicago some examples of a new form of architecture, a more sensible and more business-like treatment than he will find at home. The least impressive of the lessons he takes away with him will not be the one he gains from the study of Chicago's new buildings.—Barr Ferree, in July Lippincott's.

The Payment of Insurance Brokerage.

As to the payment of brokerage, there were a few years ago in Boston one or two local insurance companies that declined to pay brokers' commissions upon business that was brought into their office, the belief of the officers of this company being that in this way they might be able to save enough money to ultimately reduce the cost of insurance. Instead of encouraging this laudable effort, the merchants of Boston were so entirely indifferent that nearly all of the business of these two companies went off their books. Even the directors of the two companies sent their own risks in through brokers, and the result was that the corporations referred to were compelled to change their method or accept the only other alternative of going out of business.

A Philadelphia fire insurance company began a few years ago to do a mercantile business in Boston, and trusted that the opportunity for a division of the profits among the policyholders would be all that was needed to bring in business, without the intervention of brokers. But after a pretty fair trial of the method it was found that it would not work, and the company was compelled to add the brokerage payment plan.

This we are informed is a matter of record, and while there are, no doubt, in Boston as in Philadelphia, companies which are willing to pay brokerage, it is required that a reasonable proportion of the business shall be paid the insurers not bound good after a vast majority of the insured property. Middlemen in insurance, as well as in leather, boots and shoes, real estate, drug and other classes of business, are to a certain extent unnecessary factors, and it would be, no doubt, a saving if they could all be abolished, but it would be difficult to handle any class of business in which they do not take an active share, and their existence and continuance, may possibly be cited as proof of their necessity.—Boston Herald.

The Lost Continent of Atlantis.

Ignatius Donnelly finds a supporter of his Atlantis theory in Sir Daniel Wilson, president of the University of Toronto, who declares, after a great deal of search, that the lost Atlantis was not a myth, but that it was really the continent of America. He accounts for its disappearance from view in a different way, but that is merely incidental. Donnelly's theory was that the land was submerged by some great volcanic upheaval, and that from those who escaped to the continents of Europe and Asia came the tradition of the deluge. Sir Daniel rejects this explanation as being disproved by the fact that there are no traces of such volcanic action either on the continent or in the ocean bed. He believes that the ancient Egyptians, the most progressive and adventurous people of ancient times, discovered the continent, but that in the decline both of their learning and power it became lost to view and existed at the time our knowledge of Egypt begins merely as a shadowy tradition.

It is his opinion that traces of the Egyptians of those days are to be sought in the ruined cities of Central America, whose origin has never been determined or even been made the basis of any reasonable theory. Such a discovery would furnish a substantial basis for the legend of the lost Atlantis, and the theory invests those wonderful ruins with a new interest for the antiquarians.—Milwaukee Journal.

A FOOT-HOLD

for Consumption is what you are offering, if your blood is impure. Consumption is simply Lung Scrofula. A scrofulous condition, with a slight cough or cold, is all that it needs to develop it.

But just as it depends upon the blood for its origin, so it depends upon the blood for its cure. The surest remedy for Scrofula in every form, the most effective blood-cleanser, flesh-builder, and strength-restorer that's known to medical science, is Doctor Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. For Consumption in all its earlier stages, and for Weak Lungs, Asthma, Severe Coughs, and all Bronchial, Throat, and Lung affections, that is the only remedy so unfailing that it can be guaranteed. If it doesn't benefit or cure, you have your money back.

No matter how long you've had Catarrh, or how severe, Dr. Sage's Remedy will effect a permanent cure. $500 reward is offered by the proprietors of this medicine, for an incurable case of Catarrh.

CURES: Constipation, Headache and all Liver Troubles.

SULPHO-SALINE

The only palatable Laxative Water.

Refreshing and agreeable to the taste, always a most delightful aperient. For sale by druggists generally.

Mr. H. G. Lunt, president of the Board of Commerce, returned last night from a trip to the World's Fair. He thinks that the Colorado exhibit very fine, and that visitors from the "Silver State" be very tenderly unworthy of such a great state as Colorado.
